BLUE GLASS MANIA.—The Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, quotes a passage from Addison's Spectator of May 24, 1712, which attributes to the color green, an influence upon the animal economy, which, it remarks, "now that the public mind is occupied with the silly blue glass mania * * * may be interesting. The physiology is, to say the least, as good as Gen. Pleasanton's." "All colors that are more luminous, overpower and dissipate the animal spirit which are employed in sight; on the contrary, those that are more obscure do not give the animal spirit a sufficient exercise, whereas the rays that produce in us an idea of green, fall upon the eye in such a due proportion that they give the animal spirit their proper play, and by keeping up the struggle in a great balance, excite a very pleasing and agreeable sensation. Let the cause be what it will, the effect is certain, for which reason the poets ascribe to this particular color the epithet of cheerful." We are not aware that the origin of the "blues" and the "blue devils" may be, but they certainly are not suggestive of cheerful associations." We have often heard it said that "hope deferred maketh the heart sick," ergo, we, in a philanthropic spirit, would suggest to those who have tried "blue glass" with but little efficacy, and who now have the scripture before them that the effect of the "cheerful" green upon the animal spirit is certain, to not do like doubting Thomas, but go at once and erect a cheerful greenhouse, secure thyself therein, and be made whole. Prescription $1 00.

AND now the Sheriff of Pulaski is after Owens, of the Reporter, with a sharp stick, on account of some article that lately appeared in that paper, derogatory to the official standing of that august dignitary. He calls Owens a liar, his paper a lying sheet, and is as reckless with the use of the word as if it wasn't any thing to call a man a liar. We admire the usually fearless style of our contemporary, but would suggest to him the importance of knowing he is right before he goes ahead, then if he goes ahead after he knows he is right and some imaginary brave man attempts to relieve himself of odium, in a rival paper, by calling him a liar and other non-euphonious appellations, the best way to treat him is to teach him a lesson by a vigorous application of the toe of his boot to that portion of his anatomy that will render sitting down a disagreeable performance for a month or so. You see, the dignity of the press must be maintained.

ANNOUS of the recent hanging of eleven Mollie McGuire's, in Pennsylvania, an explanation of the name as applied to them may be interesting. It is said to have originated in this way: Fifty or more years ago, in Ireland, an old woman named Mollie McGuire had her cottage pulled down over her head by the landlord. Grief at this treatment and exposure, killed her. Her enraged sons and a few neighborhood lads formed in a secret band to revenge themselves, not only on that landlord, but on Irish landlords in general. They called themselves the "Mollie McGuire's." The band spread rapidly and the name was brought by miners to this country. Their terrible doings since are blood curdling.

A HORRIBLE murder of a gentleman, his wife and a young lady, at Gore, Ohio, has just been perpetrated. The object of the murder was to get possession of an amount of money that was supposed to be in the house where the unfortunate people lived. Four young men were arrested for the crime and lodged in jail, but the strong probability that the indignant citizens would lynch them, caused their removal to Lancaster. The daily papers give full accounts of the horror, and regard it as one of the most cold blooded murders on record.

ONE of the best orders that President Hayes has made, is the one directing Federal officers to attend to their business and not meddle with local politics. During the Grant dynasty, these officers, such as Postmasters, Internal Revenue men, etc., were the main meddlers in politics, and it is a subject of congratulation to the people that there is an effort at least on the part of the Executive to have done with it.

WE learn from the Railroad Gazette published at New York, that during the year ending May 31st, there were 978 Railroad accidents in the United States, whereby 305 men were killed and 1,037 injured. During the month of May, there were 46 accidents, resulting in the killing of 12 persons and the wounding of 41.

BEN HARRISON, disgusted with his brethren of the press for exposing his wonderful achievements as a gormandizer, has concluded to sell his excellent paper the Henderson News and leave the State. Don't do it old fel. The boys are bound to have some butt for their jokes.

WAR NOTES.—Up to Monday, twenty-eight thousand Russians had crossed the Danube at Ibrai. The bombardment of Rastchuk is very severe, and the garrison is suffering greatly. A special dispatch from Rastchuk says that 1,800 people have been killed in the streets by the Russian shells. Kars still holds out against the Russians, who outnumber the besieged three to one. The Turks have only one hundred rifled guns, twenty-four pounders, and fifty-four smooth bore guns, but their strong position at Karatagh enables them to hold the enemy at bay. A Constantinople dispatch says that a fresh attack by the Russians on Batoum is expected. One thousand Russians capitulated at Bayazid. It is reported that the Prince of Montenegro has been killed by his infuriated soldiers in consequence of their recent serious defeats. A Russian official dispatch, dated Katsubul, near Batoum, June 25, says: "The Turks attacked the eighth wing of the Samelsh position on the 24th instant. The fight lasted eight and a half hours, and the Turks were repulsed with great loss. The Russians lost 150 killed and wounded."

SPEAKING of the Press Convention, the Hopkinsville New Era has the following: Rothacker, of the Sunday Argus, Walton, of the Interior Journal, and Zeno Young, of the Times, were sadly misled by their friends of the quill. They missed oodles of fun, the thought of which no doubt causes them grievous lamentations.

You are mighty right it does; and when we think of the probability of having to wait another whole year before we have a chance to meet that talented gentleman, the Rev. Sam M. Gaines, our tears burst forth afresh. To know that "they missed us" though, "is an assurance most dear," and relieves to some extent the sickness of heart produced by a deferring of hope.

REIGN on the heels of the news that two-thirds of the city of St. Johns, N. B., has been burned, causing the death of ten persons and the loss of some twenty millions of dollars, comes the news of a disastrous fire at Marblehead, Mass. Fifteen acres of buildings were burned, involving a loss of over half a million of dollars. The "fire fiend" is getting in his work with alarming rapidity.

THE wind and rain storm which reached here on Tuesday, noon, originated in Nebraska on Monday. It swept through the States of Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, doing great damage to wheat and other crops, and leveling the telegraph poles for hundreds of miles. A great number of houses were blown down, and several persons are reported killed.

C. S. R. R.—The Common Carrier's Company, having made the discovery that as the bond holders of the $16,000,000 have a first mortgage on the road, there is not much show for a loan, have thrown up the sponge, and it only remains now for the tax payers of Cincinnati to pony up $2,500,000 more and complete the purchase of their elephant.

THE duty of selecting a United States Senator to succeed Hon. T. C. McCreery, will devolve on the next Legislature. There are a number of candidates already mentioned, prominent among whom are: Gov. J. H. McCreery, Hon. Proctor Knott, Hon. Isaac Caldwell, Gen. John S. Williams, Gen. W. C. P. Breckinridge and Judge Lindsey.

THE population of Illinois is increasing with fearful rapidity. Three mothers living at Marao, in that State, recently gave birth to ten children. One of them had four, and the other two, three apiece. They are all alive and kicking, and the mothers are "doing as well as could be expected."

THE Court of Appeals has affirmed the decision of the lower court in the case of Ben Mickey, sent up for life for murder, and that desperado will be taken to the penitentiary at once, as the Sheriff of Shelby has doubt of the security of the prisoner in the jail at Shelbyville.

TURKS has been no further outbreak among the Indians. The government is collecting troops and ammunition in the vicinity of the outrage, and will soon be able to hold the Reds in check. The number of the hostile Indians is said to be about 4,000.

COL. W. G. TERRELL, who was given eight years in the Penitentiary by a jury for the killing of Mr. Myers, in Covington, several years ago, had his case reversed in the Court of Appeals this week. He will now go back for a third trial.

THE Murphy movement has reached Kentucky, and a German named Ochsner who kept a saloon at Ludlow, has been killed, it is supposed by one of the enthusiasts.

DR. ROBT. McQUIDDY was nominated for the State Senate by the Democratic Convention at Lawrenceburg, last Friday.

A MOVEMENT is on foot at Lexington to petition the next Legislature to adopt the whipping-post as a punishment for petit larceny. In our opinion such a law is absolutely necessary to reduce the great expenses now attending offenses of that character, by confinement in jail. To the majority of negro thieves, a short stay in the county jail has no terror, for they rather regard it as a kind of holiday, in which their board is furnished gratuitously. But once let it be known that a law is in force to punish petty thieving with thirty-nine lashes well laid on the naked back of the thief—and a negro will consider a long time before he will run the risk of having it applied to him.

THE Democratic Convention held at Springfield last Monday, to nominate a candidate for the Legislature, adjourned after repeated balloting, without making a nomination. Cunningham, the editor of the Herald, and Thos. R. Phelps, Esq., each received the same number of votes for five ballots. Phelps has since declared his intention of withdrawing from the race, but it is not determined whether Mr. C. will be the candidate, or a new man.

THE Republicans of Iowa held a Convention on Wednesday which, after a tumultuous session, adjourned in the utmost confusion. The resolution endorsing the pacific policy of President Hayes toward the South, was greeted with groans and hisses, and finally indefinitely postponed. They declared in favor of the re-nomination of silver. Hon. John H. Gear was nominated for Governor.

THE wholesale hanging of the Mollie McGuire's in Pennsylvania last week, does not seem to have exerted a great influence for good upon their followers. Several murders have been committed in the last few days and all the men who witnessed against those that were hung have been compelled to leave the State.

THE citizens of Cincinnati are elated over the fact of having a living whale on exhibition within the limits of the city. But even in the midst of their rejoicing, the Southern Railroad rises like a hideous nightmare before them, and their laughter is turned to tears. A whale and an "elephant" are too much for them.

A YOUNG lady in Illinois kissed her sweetheart who was on his way to the Penitentiary, and managed during the operation to slip a key from her mouth to his, with which he unlocked his hand cuffs and made his escape. That was indeed a kiss worth having.

DR. J. D. WOODS, editor of the Glasgow Times, failed to get the nomination for the Legislature in his county, but that's a matter of small consequence. The oration that he delivered before the Press Convention ought to be honor enough for one year.

WE learn from the Somerset Reporter that Mr. S. J. Poplewell's hotel at Monticello, was destroyed by fire on Monday night last. By tearing down some other smaller buildings, the flames were checked and a disastrous fire checked.

FOURTY-EIGHT men have been hung in the United States during the present year. The sin of all of them had been forgiven before the fatal noose jerked them into eternity—and they were sure of going home to Jesus.

ROBT. DALE OWEN died at Lake George, N. Y., on the 24th, at an advanced age. He occupied many responsible positions during his life, was an eminent author, and was noted as a warm exponent of Spiritualism.

A SPECIAL election for seventeen members to represent Charleston county (S. C.) in the Legislature was held here on Tuesday. Democrats were elected in every instance, among whom were three negroes.

THE Police Judge of Somerset holds court on Sunday for the trial of persons arrested on that day, and the Reporter wants to know why that authority he doeth these things.

THE annual stock sales of Mr. Alexander, in Fayette county, commenced Wednesday, with the last of Lexington's cuts, the first choice of which brought $3,100.

THE President and several members of his cabinet are on a visit to Boston, and the inhabitants of the Hub are entertaining them in royal style.

It is said that the Treasury Department is considering the advisability of printing National Bank notes hereafter with new designs.

GARRARD COUNTY NEWS.

Heavy rains still vary the hot sun over days, deluging the earth without ending the atmosphere. Much of the wheat West has been surrounded to the temples. The farmers are busily engaged in the effort to preserve their supply from similar blight. This section of country abounds in unusually fine corn and wheat. In a recent tour through the county, many fields came under observation, notably those in cultivation by Mr. H. C. Jennings. This gentleman has also a watermelon enterprise which will be exceedingly interesting.

and doubtless profitable. Six acres have been devoted to the same.

Two weddings this week. On Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock, at the residence of Mr. W. H. Dunn, the holy rite of matrimony was performed by Elder J. N. Allen, for the benefit of Miss Bessie Ida Denty and Mr. Richard Mosen Robinson. We have rarely, if ever, heard more chaste and appropriate language than that in which the minister couched his solemn injunctions to the extremely youthful pair thus uniting on the smiling sea that too often rolls above treacherous breakers. The ladies and gentlemen in waiting were: Misses Eliza West and Belle Leavelle; Messrs. Wm. Boynton and George Robinson. The bride and her attendants were handsome silks, garnished with tulle draperies and becoming ornaments and the wedding tableaux was styled in the glimmering lamplight. Immediately after the ceremony the guests repaired to the residence of Mr. Ben Robinson, where an elegant entertainment was in readiness. No cards were issued except to the numerous relatives. Nevertheless, a little circle of friends put in an informal appearance and were made heartily welcome to the hospitalities of the paternal mansion. The tables were tastefully provided with meats, beverages, ices, confections, flowers, and all that could be desired by a substantial or luxurious fancy. The bridal gifts consisted principally of silver plate, and the niche assigned them glittered with these offerings of esteem. We observed a capacious ice-pitcher, an urn, baskets, spoons of all sizes, butter dishes, card receivers, napkin rings, cutlery, etc. At the reception the bride appeared in white tulle, veil, wreath, and the customary regalia of such occasions. At 12 o'clock when the moon rode high in the "blue heavens" the procession of carriages drew up to the front, and the company separated to their respective homes.

On Thursday evening Mr. Wm. Hood, will give a reception to his son, Mr. Ed. Hood, who will bring home his bride, Miss Huns, of Hintonville.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Ben Burdett left on Wednesday, for Florida, to bring home his brother, Dr. S. L. Burdett, whose health is declining rapidly. Mr. Allan Thornburg, of H. R. Claffin, N. Y., is in town.

Mr. Sam. M. Burdett, of the Mt. Vernon bar, appears among us for a few days.

Miss Geo. W. Dunlap, Jr., left on Monday, for a brief sojourn with friends in Chicago.

Miss Georgia Proctor, of Danville, is the guest of Mrs. J. P. Sandifer.

Mrs. Mary Cox, of Gallatin, Mo., is on a visit to her Jennings relatives in Garrard county.

Mr. F. D. Owsley is exceedingly prosstrated by the consuming disease that has for months held him captive.

A youthful swimmer attempted to cross Dix River in its rapid, swollen condition, when he suddenly became strangled and would have sunk but for the timely assistance of a gentleman at hand.

On the 4th of July, the Sunday Schools of Lancaster, propose having a Union Picnic in a grove near M. J. Bland's, on the new Danville Turnpike.

The Gospel Songs and National Airs, with an Organ accompaniment forms the musical programme. An address may possibly be furnished as a nucleus for the proper organizing of forces.

A rather singular instance of acute suffering has come under our notice in the case of a lady in the vicinity who dropped a small pin in her ear some days ago and cannot succeed in having it removed.

A prosperous farmer's wife whose chickens and ducks were nightly glutting the appetite of a marauding fox, was fortunate enough to catch sight of the invader, when leveling a shot gun, she briefly despatched Mr. Reynard to happier hunting grounds.

The Serenade Club are again on a harmonious tour through the city.

Poor little Bunnay has a hard time now on his native heath.

We commend the Alpha to the reading public. Its modest subscription price is only fifty cents.

The various hills and dales, by ways and highways of the county, gave up their inhabitants on Monday last and the magic word, court, drew them all into the public thoroughfares of the city. Sales were to be made, bargains struck, collections pushed, and settlements urged. "Am I my brother's keeper" receives many an affirmative response when unthinkingly endorsed and securities are called to account for misplaced confidence.

LAND SALES.—We give some of the land sales as reported to us: In the suit of John W. Poor vs. H. P. Dunn, an undivided fourth of 225 acres of land, ordered to be sold, brought $150. In the action of Augustus Jones et al. vs. B. M. Jones, 294 acres near Hintonville, brought $13 50 per acre. About 54 acres of the Rogers and Johnson land sold at $24 per acre. 27 acres of the Humm land brought $20 per acre. In the consolidated actions of S. S. King, et al. vs. B. F. Evans, the undivided half-interest of defendant in the lower lands allotted Nancy Evans, was bought by the plaintiffs at $100. In the action of John E. Amerson, et al. vs. T. F. Morgan's Heirs, 64 acres of land on Sugar Creek, ordered to be sold, was purchased by M. Flannery, at $16 50 per acre. In the suit of W. J. Luck's Adm'r. vs. W. J. Luck's Heirs and creditors, over one hundred acres of valuable land were sold.

TURNED ADRIFT.

BY MRS. EUDENIA DUNLAP FOSTER.

"Dare!" she echoed mockingly. "Well, dare any thing, won't we Brutus? I've had that precious episode a day or two. I really forgot to give it to you, but, supposing of course you could have no objection to my seeing a fatherly lecture from a guardian I amused myself with reading it this morning."

Crimson with anger as I stood with the letter now open, I could only retort, "Inassurably! I presumed you at least claimed to be a lady!"

Here Myra came to me hastily and said, "Do not mind Guy. She is only joking. She means it for fun—indeed she does."

Then with an appealing look to Guy, she said, "Say no more—there's a darling. Let's go down to the cabin and see mammy; she's a great deal worse to-day." Urging Guy with more strength than I thought she possessed, she almost pulled her from the room, while she, yielding in part to her afflicted sister, yet could not forbear to show her defiance by carelessly trifling the variations of an opera air as she went.

Instantly entering my room I was at first too much disturbed to read my letter. I felt outraged and insulted that all my pleasure in its perusal was destroyed.

I almost dreaded to find within the closely written pages, words which had revealed to prying eyes the love I had rejected, as well as the love I silently cherished.

Sure enough it was all there; except the name of Dewitt Beverly. My guardian referred to the days of our brief acquaintance at Warrenton, and called me more than once his beautiful, lonely darling, undergoing a painful probation with none near to sympathize. "Parlon me Helen," said, "that I speak thus familiarly. My love must have some vent, and surely caring words can do you no harm. I have instituted proper inquiries about him whose memory you so tenaciously prize, and you shall yet be happy if Shirley Hadyn can effect his purpose. What greater happiness can I have than in thoroughly fulfilling my duty to you?"

I was still pondering upon the contents of this useless letter when it contained besides, descriptions of his present station, when Juliet entered the room.

CHAPTER IX.

Sitting down beside me, Juliet said, "Helen, you and Guy will never get on together, I fear. She is so full of mischief and you are so sensitive. It pains me to have you always sparring; we must change it if we can."

"Then let me stay with you or else take a different room; for I have never been accustomed to interference or espionage, and I am sure I can never be reconciled to it."

"Remember, Guy is our baby; the spoiled household pet. She is indeed very provoking, and Adelaide is very little patient with her. The rest of us find that it is useless to renege, so we endure what we cannot cure. I've no doubt mama will change your room but I cannot exchange places with Guy, for she and Ad. would be fighting in a week's time. Myra, you know, never sleeps out of mama's room."

"Well, I should be much more comfortable elsewhere I confess; but of course must abide by your mother's arrangements."

"I'll speak to mama about it. We must not have you and Guy enemies."

Juliet continued to tell me incidents of the eccentricities of her sister, but I could not feel forbearing towards her in the frame of mind I then indulged.

In a few days, however, my apartment was removed to another portion of the large building, and for a time, at least, there was no further encroachments to produce hostilities.

One lovely day in April we were, as usual, sitting at some sort of light while Juliet read aloud the story of Beulah, then at the height of its popularity.

Suddenly Guy came in flushed and heated bearing a large porte-folio which she pitched on Juliet's lap, remarking carelessly:

"You might as well have shown them to me. I've seen all them anyhow, I told you I should."

In great dismay Juliet opened the leaves and found that her letters from Carl Weaverton and Major Dupont had all been rifled and perused by this untiring invader of the rights of others.

With more dissatisfaction than I had ever seen in her countenance, Juliet gathered together the scattered sheets and quietly left the room.

"Why I verily believe she's posting," was Guy's only comment upon the rare forbearance of her injured sister.

I, myself, afterwards heard extracts from some of these letters. Those from Carl Weaverton breathed a spirit of devotion that ought to have entirely satisfied any woman. Juliet, however, continued to drink recklessly of the fascinating homage tendered her by Major Dupont, whose motive could not be honorable if it denied of its air of romance.

As the season advanced with flowers mingled with the dense foliage of the wilderness and scarcely a day passed without a short excursion by the household at Mountain Hall. Visitors were there frequently for a night perhaps, or one or two days.

I had become entirely domesticated, although my earliest impressions of members of the family remained the same. From Mrs. Garnet I never received any thing more than cold courtesy. Upon the whole I was unimpairedly situated. I made the most of the circumstances and extracted what pleasure I could from this tough root of discord, that undermined my peace.

Guy's anticipated visit to the grarrison had been unavailingly deferred on account of the swollen streams which made it impossible to take the wilderness road or even to cross the bridges between Mountain Hall and the river-landing where she might have taken a boat. She chafed a good deal at the delay, and rendered herself exceedingly annoying in every possible way.

Letters had continued to come regularly from my guardian, but he had never again referred to his love, and I have no words to describe the desolation that at times came over me as I realized how completely I was cut off from all endearing ties.

At last as the summer came on I ceased to hear from Captain Hadyn. There was a good deal of disturbance farther West among the Indians and finally the troops at Fort Wintrop and Carlisle were ordered out to quell the outbreak.

My suspense was painful as the papers came in full of accounts of skirmishes. At length there was a decisive action, short, but bloody, in which Captain Hadyn was promoted to the rank of Major for his gallant services. When all was again quiet I looked eagerly for his account of the campaign, but I was destined here as in all else, to disappointment.

It was on an intensely hot day in August when Mrs. Garnet's coachman drove in to the landing for Carl Weaverton, who was to come up to the Nowland, due then at Fort Temple. An accident had detained the steamer on a sand bar several days. At the Hall there was great excitement, for all were tenderly attached to the expected guest. Juliet was wrought up to a pitch of expectation difficult to express, and I felt gratified to see such evidences of love in spite of the fascination exerted by Major Dupont.

Twilight had not yet set in when the traveler arrived and was greeted with the noisy demonstrations that usually mark the coming of a dear relative.

Juliet had said I should like him, and he did indeed impress me at once with the utmost admiration and confidence. Tall and powerfully built, his robust frame presented the perfection of manly strength and vigor. His whole physique breathed a magnetic fullness of life impossible to be met without some degree of infection, and I wondered how the woman he had honored with his love could for a moment tolerate the addresses of another.

His complexion was clear and beautiful, his hair black as the ot-quoted raven's wing, and his expressive grey eyes were fringed with black lashes that gave them a deeper hue of shading. His features were all fine. A graceful moustache permitted full view of his white teeth when he smiled or conversed. But one of the most attractive gifts nature had bestowed on him was a deep mellow voice that he modulated to suit every emotion of the soul; that was irresistibly tender and even caressing in tone whenever he addressed Juliet. His love for her was complete in its entire devotion.

To every member of the family he adapted his versatile powers. His boyish love of fun made him a friend and favorite of Guy, while he was, at the same time, a mentor in her feeble moods. She accepted remonstrance from him with better grace than from any other living creature.

I could not help thinking Carl Weaverton's name a misnomer. With his splendid physical attractions he looked some fifty years, born to conquer and command. He was intellectually gifted beyond the ordinary; and possessed one of the most chivalrous natures I ever knew.

If I had been less perturbed mentally, I should have fully enjoyed the agreeable change in the family associations that followed the advent of Juliet's lover. He was to remain a month and at once domesticated himself in an easy manner that banished all effort on the part of his hostess. To Mrs. Garnet he proved an invaluable assistant in the various nursing cases of her large plantation. She had met with a heavy pecuniary loss a few months before and I could well understand how she chafed at the greater loss of the property she had expected to inherit from her brother. She was careful to provide for my comfort, but there was never, there never could be any love between us.

Juliet was not selfish with regard to her betrothed. She was never alone with him except when they went out into the forest for a walk or a ride,

We now spent the greater part of the day in the parlors. Sometimes the two diagers in the cozy rooms after the other members of the family withdrew for the night, but the evenings were usually devoted to music and general conversation. It was yet more agreeable when Carl Weaverton read aloud from the choice library of favorite authors. At such times his fine countenance grew radiant with the spirit of the theme, and Juliet was inexpressibly happy while drinking in the music of his voice.

It was a sultry, oppressive afternoon in the latter part of August. Juliet was finishing a tobacco-pouch and I sang for Mr. Weaverton who turned the leaves, occasionally adding a deep bass accompaniment. He had welcomed me warmly as a member of the family, and in every possible way made me feel that I could depend upon his friendship. Suddenly a ring at the door caused a start of surprise; and in a few moments a gentleman entered who not only failed to announce his name, but persistently kept his hat over his eyes. At the first glance we were unfeignedly astonished. A moment more and a hearty laugh broke from the inmates of the parlor as well as those who had followed into the hall. It was Guy, newly attired in a full suit of Mr. Weaverton's, her queenly figure looking remarkably graceful in the wide garments. Juliet was shocked beyond expression, and the gentleman, after indulging in the first burst of merriment, said: "Miss Guy, do be careful and let no one but ourselves see you. What on earth is it you wouldn't do?"

"Well, it's dull enough any where with a pair of turtle-doves billing and cooing; but down here in this wilderness I'll vow I'm about to stagnate."

They were all in by this time, and various were the remonstrances and comments. But she was bent upon having the frolic out, and an hour was devoted to matches of opera, detached scenes from Shakspeare, and a variety of imitable reproductions from itinerant troupes picked up during her life. At length when some of her spectators had laughed themselves hoarse she declared her intention of going to a neighbor's and finishing up the day.

"Well, I'll go with you," said Mr. Weaverton. All protested, but looking significantly at Juliet, he went out after Guy who was already on the lawn. We watched them proceed slowly to the gate, her figure looking comical beside him, and Juliet could not conceal her mortification at this unexpected break of her volatile sister.

The pair paused at the gate evidently conversing seriously. They then skirted around the premises, not in the direction of the cottages, but towards the rear of the house. Soon we heard light footsteps on the stairs, a door slam above us, and all was still. Then Mr. Weaverton entered looking mysterious and in due time Guy reappeared, charmingly attired in a soft black grenadine, and wearing a countenance most innocent of all impurities. Juliet congratulated Carl upon his influence over her hoydenish sister.

That night a letter was thrust under my door with these words scribbled in pencil, "I found this lying on my floor. If there is any thing wrong about it, please be forbearing for the sake of the innocent. Yrs. C. W."

Flushed and agitated, I recognized the writing as my guardian's, and the date when examined bore full evidence that he had not neglected me but had long ago perhaps, condemned me as careless and negligent when I had so earnestly begged for a word from him. He told me of his encounters with the red men, and said he had a box of curious and valuable Indian relics for me. One sentence in the letter filled my whole being with a strange delight. It was this: "Dewitt Beverly is a name registered among the European arrivals in a New York paper. I shall watch and await developments."

CHAPTER X.

Long I mused upon the incident of the letter. Guy Garnet, with her inordinate propensity for interfering, had suppressed it and made herself mistress of its contents. I knew she had in the first instance been prompted by curiosity; but latterly she took no pains to conceal her enmity, and I could readily believe that a feeling of revenge alone was the cause of this last act of treachery. How generously Carl Weaverton had tried to shield her. She had doubtless dropped the missive while preparing for her example of the afternoon.

Then it bore date so far back that if Dewitt Beverly was indeed seeking me he had had ample time to trace me here. I could not sleep. I peeped at last pointed to fruition, and I saw a future haven of love and rest instead of this gilded palace of worldliness where each day revealed some violation of domestic happiness.

For the hundredth time my brain grew giddy with pictures of the past and of the coming day. Outwardly calm I had long since learned to appear. Resigned I could never be. The morning lesson encouraged the believer to "rest in the Lord and wait patiently," Myra had said, "Cousin, waiting is a hard duty, isn't it?" She little knew how hard. Her calm, saintly affection knew naught of the intense craving of my heart. Her goal was the eternal one where there shall be no more waiting. Mine was as earthly paradise with human love to keep it garnished. I now felt that to suspense would be added nervous expectation painful to endure. I knew I should watch with straining eyes every avenue of approach to Mountain Hall; for surely no power could long keep him away from me.
